It's so funny how simple it is to dispel the myth of "non-binary genders". When gender is expanded to the point of meaning basically nothing and anyone can be anything they say they are we fall back to using sex as a main distinguishing factor and non-binary women are considered women as much as a cisgender woman. This is why non-binary men like OP will never be accepted in those spaces. If you passed as a woman you wouldn't be having this problem. Transmedicalism is the only way to reliably navigate the reality of the world around us.

Yes they were uncomfortable because you are a fucking man and you were at a women's event. There is no such thing as "nonbinary". It has as much weight as someone saying "some people are on the Red Team and some people are on the Gold Team and I'm on Gold Team". It's completely meaningless and fictional. It goes away as soon as people stop believing in it.

It's because "non-binary" is a category of exclusion. It's nearly meaningless. People should instead refer to the specific subsets of non-binary, like:

- >femboy
- >dickgirl/futa
- >cuntboy
- >genderfuck
- >nullo/agender

the list goes on this is why i never go to any trans spaces where i live. it's always millennial diaper wearing techhons what i mean by that is >some google employees invite me to google HQ to see what it's like working there >walk into the shared workroom >four or five hons sitting around a table wearing pajamas, typing away at their gay-sticker plastered laptops.

>some have stubble, but all their PJs are pastel colored with designs little girls would wear on them >obviously been on HRT for years but don't pass in the slightest it smelled like AGP. i could fucking taste it in the air practically.

apparently the botnet is run by hons, who knew.

anyways, any adult related trans meetups would be chock full of them. there's nothing relatable about them to me so it would be useless to talk to them about it i guess.
